DEAN'S DESK

Let me briefly share with you some of the important directions in which the College of Law will likely be going in the near future. I do so, not so much as part of anything so formal as a long-range plan, but as a logical consequence of movement already underway. And I shall attempt to avoid mention of the extensive fundraising and planning efforts that we are engaged in currently to improve our physical facility dramatically.

Our Law Library is one of the law school's greatest strengths. It needs constant nurturing. Our recently selected new Director, Alan Holoch, has on his agenda the enhancement of acquisitions, the enlargement of staff, the diversification of service, and the achievement of distinctiveness as well as greater depth in the collection. He is an experienced professional with innovative ideas regarding the uses of developing technology. The aim of our partnership is one of the country's most advanced legal information centers, one that will respond to the needs of the bench and bar as well as faculty and students.

The student body at Ohio State has historically been a strong one. In a time of declining applications across the country, our goal is to improve the quality of our students. We are taking steps to diversify our student body while reducing overall size slightly. A higher percentage of our students are likely to come from (and perhaps return to) States other than Ohio, so long as we do not turn away well-qualified Ohio residents. Enhanced scholarship assistance will attract more blue-chippers, whose input in class and extracurricularly will be notable and noticeable. What our graduates do will likely change as well, responsible in part to efforts to assist them in adapting to a changing job market for new lawyers.

Our faculty is composed of a talented group of teachers and scholars. As new chairs and professorships are funded, we will recognize a growing number of our most accomplished colleagues by supporting them in the manner of outstanding law schools across the country. We must not only keep our best, but give thoughtful, time-consuming attention to attracting the excellent prospects to join us. We should look less for persons who will replicate ourselves than for those who will be at the cutting edge of matters of consequence in the future. We should never forget, however, that inspired classroom teaching must rival scholarship and service as the proper business of an outstanding law faculty.

The academic program needs to reflect the directions in which legal education has been moving, while at the same time possessing a character natural to our past history, existing strengths, and future history. In this latter regard we should endeavor more to lead than to follow others, asking what we can do that we ought to do with our resources, so long as we can do it well. We should seek to acquire a reputation so that others will say — "if it's such-and-such an area of concentration, or this-or-that type of program that interests you, Ohio State is where you'll find it done as well as (or better than) anywhere else." In an increasingly inter-dependent world we need to expand our land-locked vistas with programs in and relating to a number of foreign countries. At the same time we need to take better advantage of our situation in the capital city of a major state and as an integral part of one of the country's most comprehensive universities. With large numbers of lawyers going it alone, we must also strengthen our well-established and highly regarded clinical programs. In doing so we should seek an effective integration of theory and practice, as part of a developing new methodology. And we should endeavor to train the "whole lawyer" — the planner and the dispute resolver, the public servant along with the private practitioner, the thinker as well as the doer.

As Ohio's premier law school, we must stake out a claim as one of the nation's great centers of legal education. The concerns of the legal profession, and of society as it interacts with lawyers, must be ours. Our enlarged and modernized building must be more than that — it must be a law center where all of the constituencies involved with lawyering mingle and better themselves and each other. In this undertaking, our more than 6,000 alumni must occupy a central role. You are our shareholders, so to speak. We must serve you well, and in an even more direct way, serve, as well as we can, those soon-to-be alumni whom we call students. We must set the example for them so that the professionalism of lawyers is foremost on their minds as they graduate and begin to serve the public. And through services, conferences, programs, commentary, and cooperative ventures, we must work with you and learn from each other.

The 1990's can be the College of Law's greatest decade. All of us, working together, must take steps now to be able to stake out that claim as we approach our centennial year of 1991. All of us, and the society we seek to serve, will be the better for it.

COLLEGE PREPARES FOR ITS SECOND CENTURY

Centennial Campaign Kicks-Off

Excitement! Anticipation! The exhilaration of challenge. These are emotions that normally charge the atmosphere in Ohio Stadium on football Saturdays. On the evening of September 26, these same emotions were shared at the other end of the OSU campus as law alumni, friends, faculty, students, and guests gathered to kick-off the College's Centennial Campaign.

Twinkling lights and candle-light dining in the Library temporarily transformed the College; the goal for those assembled was to transform Ohio State permanently into one of the nation's premiere law schools. This was the exciting challenge as the College kicked-off its $11.5 million Centennial Campaign.

Dean Francis X. Beytagh welcomed guests to the historic occasion. He shared his visions for a dynamic future for the College of Law and outlined the tasks embraced by the Campaign goals. Thomas E. Cavendish, '53, Co-chair of the Centennial Campaign, reported early gifts and pledges of $5.3 million, nearly 50% of goal. The kick-off put the Campaign in excellent field position.

An important objective of the Campaign is to bring to each graduate an opportunity to pay forward to the next generation of law students some of the personal rewards achieved from his or her legal education at OSU. This was the stirring message from Co-chair Norman Shibley, '49. "Ohio State University provided to me, a poor boy from northern Ohio, educational opportunities I never thought possible," said Shibley. "The University will always be very special to me. I welcome this opportunity to say 'thanks' by taking part in this exciting campaign."

aware of the enormous undertaking it is initiating. Private giving of this magnitude challenges fundamental attitudes associated with public institutions. "The law school's campaign is in step with change," was the message from Co-chair Jack Van Fossen, '63. "Public institutions throughout the country are entering a new era of partnership with private contributors. We at Ohio State must look, in part, to ourselves if we are to move this great law school into the 21st century prepared and confident to meet the needs of students and the legal profession. Through our collective efforts, Ohio State will be able to offer one of the best legal educations, in one of the nation's best equipped facilities, and at reasonable costs. This can be our legacy to the next generation," said Van Fossen.

To bring that commitment closer at hand, concepts for an expanded and renovated Law Building were unveiled. Frank Elmer, of Trott & Bean Architects, explained library and office expansion possibilities based on their preliminary architectural study. The evening concluded with dessert, coffee, and talk about the future.

The Law Library resumed the routines of research and study. But what occurred the night of September 26 is expected to remain an important part of its history. It was the night alumni, friends, and faculty pledged themselves to solve critical space problems and to advance the College to new plateaus of support and achievement.

The kick-off helped bring the Centennial Campaign to midfield. The next fifty yards to the goal line will not yield to success without player determination. A team spirit has been kindled. Confidence grows that goals will be achieved.

Building Plans Call for Vision

How will we educate law students in ten years? In the year 2025? How will law be practiced in the 21st century? What impact will technology have on legal education and practice? All of these questions are before Dean Francis X. Beytagh and the Building Planning Committee charged with planning the Law Building expansion to be completed in 1991.

Technological advances shorten the distance to the horizon of the future. Nevertheless, Dean Beytagh and the faculty must plan a facility that will accommodate change well into the next century. "Flexibility and adaptability must be the hallmarks of our planning efforts," states Professor Howard Fink, chair of the Building Committee.

Faculty are working to articulate space and educational needs that will guide the final design for the expansion and renovation of the Law Building. Input is being drawn from students, faculty, legal educators, lawyers, and users of the College's Law Library and facilities. The Committee's early report contributed to the design concepts presented last September by the consulting architectural firm of Trott & Bean.

The preliminary designs for the Law Building are being shared by Dean Beytagh as he visits with alumni groups to discuss future directions for the College and to solicit questions and comments. The planning process will continue to identify space needs and design solutions through research, visitations, and wide-ranging consultations. "We have a unique opportunity not only to anticipate the future but to influence that future by what we do at Ohio State College of Law," states Dean Beytagh.

Since the mid 1970's many modernization projects, either as expansion-renovations or as new buildings, have taken place at other Big-10 law schools, and at many law schools in Ohio and throughout the country. Representatives of the College have been or will be visiting law schools with modernized facilities such as Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Architect Dick Trott presenting a model of the proposed building to Dean Murphy and other members of the faculty and administration.

Virginia, and Texas to name a few. Data on successes and shortcomings of building programs are part of the planning process underway at the College.

Building on the Past; Looking to the Future

Page Hall housed the law school on the OSU campus from 1903 until functions were transferred to the present Law Building during the late 1950's. Dean Frank R. Strong and Professor Ervin Pollack planned the present Law Building that served this institution well for a quarter of a century. But their forward thinking in the 50's no longer responds to research and educational space needs nor provides for program innovation and the needs of today's law students.

Bringing the past forward into the future through expansion and renovation of the present Law

Building presents challenge and opportunity. Design concepts, as they are evolving, respect the College's distinguished past. But most importantly, they must envision the future of legal education and the opportunities for The Ohio State University College of Law to be an exciting center for dynamic interactions and creative legal thought.

The College's second century is dependent in large measure upon our collective vision of the future and a successful building program. Plans are emerging; overdue space solutions are at hand.

Law Firms Demonstrate Campaign Support

The generous commitments of several prominent Ohio law firms to the Centennial Campaign were announced at the start of the campaign. The firm of Baker & Hostetler made a leadership gift to the John D. Drinko-Baker & Hostetler Chair. The firm and individual partners from both Cleveland and Columbus were instrumental in putting together the funding of this first endowed chair for the College of Law.

In mid-September, the Columbus firm of Vorys, Sater, Seymour & Pease announced its commitment of $250,000 to the Law Building Expansion and Renovation effort. The gift from the firm and individual partners will be recognized by naming the new space for the Ohio State Law Journal for Webb I. Vorys, founder of the law firm and a 1917 graduate of the College of Law.

At the campaign kick-off dinner in late September, Thomas E. Cavendish, campaign co-chair and partner with Porter, Wright, Morris & Arthur of Columbus, announced the $250,000 commitment of that firm and several of its partners to the Law Building project. This gift will be used to provide a new student lounge named after the firm.

By December, two more firms had announced their campaign commitments. The Columbus firms of Schottenstein, Zox & Dunn and Schwartz, Kelm, Warren & Rubenstein have demonstrated their support for the Centennial Campaign through gifts from the firms and from individual members of the firms. The designated use of each firm's gift is still being determined. Schwartz, Kelm, Warren & Rubenstein became the first firm to achieve 100% participation of all Ohio State law alumni in a firm.

On December 9, 1986, a special luncheon was hosted by Melvin L. Schottenstein, '58, Thomas E. Cavendish, '53, and Arthur I. Vorys, '49, for the managing partners or their representatives of the 25 largest law firms in Columbus, including the large firms in other Ohio cities with Columbus offices. Those in attendance heard about the plans to expand the Law Library and renovate the building from Dean Beytagh. Mel Schottenstein, Tom Cavendish, and Art Vorys told luncheon guests about their firms' commitments and urged each firm to participate in the Centennial Campaign.

Visits with Ohio law firms continue as part of the campaign plan. The College of Law seeks to raise $11.5 million for endowment, capital, and annual giving from alumni, friends, law firms, foundations, and corporations nationally.

COMMITTEE BEGINS CENTENNIAL PLANNING

The year 1991 may sound far off to most people, but not to the members of the Centennial Planning Committee. The Committee, chaired by Betsey Brewster Case, '68, held its initial meeting on September 26. The Committee wants to throw a great 100th birthday party in 1991-92.

"The College's Centennial provides an unusual opportunity to involve many alumni with the College and to promote the achievements of the College's faculty and graduates on a state and national basis," states Betsey Case. Dean Francis X. Beytagh supports the involvement of the Committee in activity planning and sees their contributions impacting far beyond 1991.

The Committee began work in January to develop a Centennial theme and logo and a tentative agenda of activities to take place during 1991-92. Planning and implementation will involve increasing numbers of alumni in the Centennial celebrations.

Nancy Ralston Cupps, '65, is chairing the sub-committee on the Centennial History. "We have started to review source materials and other publications to help us decide what kind of a history will be prepared," reports Nancy Cupps. "We will be looking to our alumni and former faculty for photographs, memorabilia and personal anecdotes that can be part of our Centennial story."

DRINKO RECEIVES UNIVERSITY'S HIGHEST HONOR

At the Summer 1986 Commencement, John Deaver Drinko was awarded an Honorary Doctor of Laws Degree. The LL.D. was conferred August 29 by authority of the Board of Trustees in recognition of John Drinko's distinguished career as a lawyer and business counselor, his significant management contributions to the growth of the Cleveland law firm of Baker & Hostetler with which he has been associated since 1945, his extraordinary leadership on behalf of the College of Law and The Ohio State University, and his many philanthropic activities. Family and friends were guests of the College of Law on the evening of August 28 to share in the celebration of this important event.

University has been recognized by the Alumni Centennial Award in 1970 and the Distinguished Service Award in 1981. In April 1986, he was elected to the board of directors of the Ohio State University Foundation. John Drinko's leadership has helped to establish the C. William O'Neill, John W. Bricker, and Newton D. Baker-Baker & Hostetler Professorships of Law and the Noel F. George-Baker & Hostetler Library Fund. In 1986, together with his wife Elizabeth G. Drinko, colleagues, friends, and other contributors, he established the John D. Drinko-Baker & Hostetler Chair in Law.

LAW ALUMNI HONORED

The Alumni Association of The Ohio State University selects annually from among its hundreds of thousands of alumni to honor a few who have offered service to the University and their communities. It is particularly rewarding to have three graduates of the College of Law so honored at the 1986 ceremonies.

The Ralph Davenport Mershon Award for Service to the University was given to Robert M. Duncan, B.S. '48, J.D. '52, LL.D. '79. Among the elements of service to University Hospitals and the College of Law was cited a judicial internship program for law students, initiated by Duncan while he served on the federal bench. Duncan returned to private practice as a partner in Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue in 1985.

Duncan responded to the award by noting that "for many years Ohio State has been a substantial and positive part of my life. Receiving this award is the unexpected highpoint of that association. I am sincerely honored to accept — however, only with the state of mind that I share the award with many others with whom it has been my pleasure to have worked on behalf of the university."

Alumni Citizenship Awards are given to alumni who serve their communities in substantial ways. They embody the spirit of Ohio State's motto: "Training for Citizenship." Two law alumni were honored with 1986 awards.

Geoffrey S. Goll J.D. '73, a partner in the law firm of Goll and Guehl in Salem, Ohio, has been active in a number of social service, business, and professional organizations in Salem. On receiving his award he remarked that "both my father and mother graduated from Ohio State University and, although I was accepted at other prestigious law schools, the tradition of OSU won out. I received an excellent education and was urged to help my community with my newfound knowledge; to be nominated for this award tells me that maybe, in some small way, I have started to pay back my community, my family, and OSU the debt of gratitude I owe."

Melvin S. Schottenstein, B.S. '54, J.D. '58, president of Schottenstein, Zox & Dunn, L.P.A., has given sustained commitment to public service for many years in Columbus, Franklin County, and The Ohio State University. His efforts spread across the spectrum of business, education, service, and religious organizations. "My reaction to receiving this award from The Ohio State University is one of immense pleasure and gratitude. The pleasure, because of the respect I have for the educational institution giving me this award, and gratitude because I believe that much of my success in business and in this community is due in large measure to the educational opportunities afforded me by this great university."

ALUMNI RETURN GETS IN THE SPIRIT

Alumni, faculty, students and guests attending the 1986 Alumni Return Luncheon on September 26 were dramatically transported to the hot days and debates taking place during the Philadelphia summer of 1776. Cast members of the Columbus Bar Association's production of "1776" entertained the audience with a brief encore from their successful performance presented last July at the Palace Theater. The cast vividly reminded the audience of the contributions of lawyers to the forging of America's independence and systems of government. The "1776" encore set the tone for the Luncheon program dedicated to alumni service to the organized bar.

The College's special guest for the Return was John Shepherd, former president of the American Bar Association and distinguished member of the St. Louis bar. "This has been the golden age of the lawyers," stated Shepherd. "We have 700,000 lawyers in the United States now. A ridiculous number say some; far more lawyers than we can use in the actual practice of the law. [Yet, in recent years,] there are more young people who want to go to law school than ever before in our history. They want to be part of the administration of justice. Why? Because that's where the action is," emphasized Shepherd. He attributed this attraction to the role of law in social changes which have occurred in America. "Yes, every social change, since those days of 1776, started out with some lawyer on the floor of a courtroom urging that the time has come for a change," stated Shepherd, one of the nation's outstanding trial lawyers.

"I think we can paraphrase Teddy Roosevelt that each of us owes some time to the upbuilding of our profession," stated Frank E. Bazler, '53, who introduced the guest. "John Shepherd took that to heart. He served as president of the St. Louis Bar Association. He served twenty years in the A.B.A. House of Delegates, he was its chairman in 1978, and in 1984-85 he became President of the American Bar Association. This means he has dedicated his professional life to upbuilding our profession" stated Bazler. Shepherd has been a world ambassador for the American bar and his travel to Columbus evidences his on-going commitment.

Shepherd gave special recognition to advisors, supporters and friends in the audience: Earl Morris, former A.B.A. president, J. Paul McNamara, '32, Norton Webster, '52, and Norman Shibley, '48. He urged alumni to take part in the important work of the College for its building program. He related his own satisfaction in heading a successful fund drive for the new law school at St. Louis University. He reminded the audience that "our heritage and what we have done has always depended upon the continuity and flow between the teacher and the active practitioner for the benefit of the public."

Norton Webster and John Shepherd enjoying luncheon conversation.

Shepherd also spoke about the work of the A.B.A. and lawyers to combat drug trafficking and abuse in our communities. He also referred to the Stanley report which addresses important issues concerning "professionalism".

John Shepherd

"There are still aspirations; still things to be done," concluded Shepherd. "I say to you, lawyers have been given the advantage of education, advantages of objective thinking, advantages of identifying their own talents and where they can perform best. No one can better do what you can do." The Luncheon concluded with recognition of one of the things lawyers do well — service to the profession.

ALUMNI HONORED FOR BAR SERVICE

The College of Law takes pride in the tradition of leadership from among its graduates in the work of the organized bar. Ohio State law alumni are active participants in local, state and national bar associations. Men and women receiving recognition at the 1986 Alumni Return Luncheon well demonstrated this commitment.

Among Ohio State alumni are six past presidents of the Ohio State Bar Association. Certificates of Distinction were presented to Norton R. Webster, '52, John M. Adams, '54, Norman W. Shibley, '48, Frank E. Bazler, '53, and Duke W. Thomas, '64. Erle Bridgewater, Jr., '46, of Athens, Ohio, was unable to attend for personal recognition. Ohio State graduates have also been highly visible in the leadership of the Columbus Bar Association. Over the past 20 years, 72% of the presidents of the C.B.A. received their law degrees from Ohio State. A number of past presidents shared in the recognition program.

Alumni assume many leadership roles within county bar organizations, the Ohio State and American Bar Associations, and other professional organizations. The College of Law commends this important commitment which brings invaluable contributions to the service and professionalism of the organized bar and distinction to the College of Law.

OPENHOUSE ATTRACTS ALUMNI

Returning alumni browsed through the law school, chatted with faculty, reminisced with classmates and enjoyed a box lunch under the oak trees on the north lawn. The September 27 Openhouse was a pleasant prelude to the afternoon gridiron show between Ohio State and Utah. Members of the reunion classes of 1966 and 1976 were well represented among returning alumni at the Openhouse.

CLASS OF 1936 REUNITES FOR CELEBRATION

Members of the Class of 1936 entered the legal profession at a time of change. Franklin D. Roosevelt was in the White House and recovery was the mood of the nation. However, on other continents, Nazi imperialism and Japanese expansionism were speeding the world to greater calamity. Conflagrations of war claimed the energy and talents of many of these young lawyers for half of the next decade. History moved fast and the details have dimmed. But there were many memories and reflections of 1936 classmates as they met the evening of September 20 at the University Club in Columbus. The occasion was the fiftieth anniversary of their graduation from the College of Law. It was a festive evening for the sixteen class members and their spouses who turned back the clock and shared some of their adventures since long-ago days in Page Hall on the campus of OSU.

Dean Francis X. Beytagh joined the Class and their spouses for the special celebration and extended congratulations on behalf of the law school community. This milestone celebration was preserved by the compilation of a Class of 1936 Reunion book of letters from class members. Their collective achievements were a source of joy and pride. The concluding statement in their Reunion book summarizes the intervening years. "Living these past 50 years has never been dull. Continuous change has been the rule. And now, it is History."

Congratulations to the Class of 1936. Thanks from those who directly and indirectly benefitted from your many achievements and contributions.

LAW FORUM DEDICATED TO BI-CENTENNIAL

The 1986-87 Law Forum Lectures initiated the College of Law celebration of "200 Years of American Constitutionalism." Three distinguished guests provided insightful commentary on this theme from various perspectives. The lectures discussed the contributions of American constitutional law as a model for world democracies, some of the experiential and philosophical roots of our American Constitution, and a critique of our constitutional history from the black perspective.

The Law Forum Lectures began October 14 with the visit of Justice Brian Walsh, Senior Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Ireland. During his twenty-five years of service on the Court, Justice Walsh has written most of the major constitutional decisions and has been a leader in the increased activism and sensitivity to individual rights in Ireland. He is also a member of the European Court of Human Rights. Since 1973 he has been a member of the European Economic Commission's Committee of Experts on private International Law.

Justice Walsh received his legal education at University College, Dublin. He distinguished himself as an Irish barrister and served in various capacities in the Irish government and judiciary before becoming a member of the Supreme Court of Ireland in 1961. He has written extensively on constitutional law and human rights issues and has lectured at American, Canadian, and English Universities.

During his visit Justice Walsh met with members of the Irish community, participated in a Constitutional Law class, and met informally with students and faculty. The lecture provided a comprehensive view of how American constitutional concepts influenced the drafting of the 1937 Constitution for the Republic of Ireland as well as a comparative analysis of the American and Irish documents.

1964. Professor Howard is a recognized scholar of legal history and constitutional law and a highly respected teacher. He has also been a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University and twice a Fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center, Washington, D.C. Upon receiving his law degree from the University of Virginia, he served as law clerk to Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black.

OSU Professor Art Greenbaum with his former law school teacher, Dick Howard.

Professor Howard served as Executive Director of the Commission that drafted the new state Constitution for Virginia. He played an instrumental role in its successful ratification. He also has been consultant to the Virginia State Legislature and to the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee. He currently serves as Counselor to the governor of Virginia. Professor Howard is author of numerous articles and several books, one receiving a Phi Beta Kappa award. His lecture focused upon fundamental threads in our Anglo-American heritage that were preserved in our Constitution and which continue to influence contemporary debate and dialogue on constitutional issues.

The second lecture in the series was presented January 27 by Professor A.E. Dick Howard, White Burkett Miller Professor of Law and Public Affairs at the University of Virginia where he has served since

The final guest to visit the College of Law was The Honorable A. Leon Higginbotham, Jr., Judge, United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Judge Higginbotham has served in the federal judiciary for over twenty years and is one of the nation's distinguished jurists. He was appointed to the Federal District Court in 1964 as the nation's youngest federal judge and was elevated to the Court of Appeals by President Carter in 1977.

Following receipt of his J.D. degree from Yale University, Judge Higginbotham entered private practice. Subsequently he distinguished himself in public service as an assistant district attorney, special deputy attorney general and a Commissioner of the Federal Trade Commission from 1962 to 1964. He is a Lecturer-in-Law at Harvard Law School and the University of Pennsylvania Law School and has taught at various other law schools.

Judge Higginbotham and his Sixth Circuit colleague Judge Nathaniel Jones enjoying the reception after the third lecture.

He is the author of numerous articles and a 1978 award-winning book, In the Matter of Color: Race and the American Legal Process; the Colonial Period.

Judge Leon Higginbotham

In his lecture on March 4, Judge Higginbotham discussed race and the Constitution, tracing the status of slavery, and issued a challenge to the unfinished business of racial issues under American constitutionalism. Before and after the lecture Judge Higginbotham spoke informally with faculty and students.

The series was scheduled to include two other perspectives but the professional duties of the speakers precluded their participation.

The Law Forum Lectures were established in 1958 through the initiatives of faculty and students as the College's first endowed lecture-ship. The Lecture series continues its commitment to academic enrichment by exposing the law school community to stimulating thought and commentary by distinguished guests. The 1986-87 Law Forum Lectures will be published in the Ohio State Law Journal.

Justice Brennan To Participate In May Hooding

The Class of 1987 will be honored to have as their Hooding speaker The Honorable William J. Brennan, Jr., of the Supreme Court of the United States. Justice Brennan will address the graduating class, family, friends, and guests at the May 17 Hooding Ceremonies for the College of Law, to be held at 2:00 p.m. in Mershon Auditorium on the University campus.

Justice Brennan, a member of the nation's highest court since 1956, will receive an Honorary Doctor of Laws degree from The Ohio State University during the proceedings.

LIBRARY NEWS

A Fond Farewell to Nancy Miller

From the day in 1959 that the College of Law Library completed the move from Page Hall to the current Law Building on North High Street, until December 31, 1986, Nancy Miller oversaw technical services – the pulse of a library – its cataloging. Imagine a research library of some 465,000 volumes and articles without a catalog. Imagine the College of Law Library without Nancy Miller. Both boggle the mind.

Nancy Miller looked at all the available shelves in 1959 and was overjoyed. She had come from a library where the by-words were “weed out and shift” collections. Now the College of Law has resorted to weeding out and shifting collections to compact shelving and boxes. She is again enthusiastic at the prospect of new library space in the proposed remodeling of the College, planned for its Centennial in 1991.

Alas, Nancy Miller will no longer be overseeing technical services. She heads for “what surely must be early retirement” in the words of former Dean Frank R. Strong. Dean Strong captured the spirit of 27 years of student and faculty appreciation for the work of Miss Miller when he noted in a commemorative letter to her, “most assuredly you richly deserve respite from the daily labors and responsibilities of your key position as Assistant Director of the Heart of Internal Operations.”

Nancy Miller came to the attention of the late Professor Ervin Pollack, Director of the Law Library when she participated in a Law Library Institute at OSU in the early 1950's. As a general reference librarian in Akron, she knew how to answer questions.

“I simply had to learn how to answer the kinds of questions lawyers ask.”

In 1959 Miss Miller was in charge of the extension services at Akron Public Library with three bookmobiles, two county branches, hospital and detention home branches. The bookmobile was interesting but “drivers and librarians are not always on the same wavelength,” notes Miss Miller. On “one of those days” – one on which the bookmobile was stuck in heavy traffic with no gas and no emergency brake – the offer came from Professor Pollack. The serenity of the Law Library held a certain appeal that hot summer day and for 27 years to follow.

Ever the reference librarian, Nancy Miller takes her busman's holiday by working weekends at the Capital University Law Center in Columbus in the reference and reserve bookroom. She likes the opportunity for contact at the front desk after working all week at OSU behind the scenes. Capital needed her services before she was ready to leave OSU; thus, for five years she did double duty, giving her a six-and-a-half day work week.

That kind of schedule left little time for projects at home. Her first retirement months will allow her to organize a few things there. She looks forward to tackling some genealogy work and to putting her stamp collection into shape.

Along with projects too long ignored and some trips to visit friends all over this country and in Holland and Denmark, Nancy Miller hopes to audit some theology courses at Trinity Lutheran Seminary in Columbus. She is particularly interested in comparative religions for her own interest, “to substantiate theories I have or deflate them; to see whether they stand up.”

Paul Fu and Nancy Miller

Colleagues and Friends Honor Nancy Miller

In November Nancy Miller was honored at a reception attended in person and by letter by many current and former colleagues, impressing on the assembled group their personal affection and respect for her librarianship. Letters were collected in a scrapbook, noting with humor and warmth her impact on students who worked for her as well as on colleagues from all over the country. Paul S. Fu, law librarian at The Supreme Court of Ohio, called her "one of the few nationally famous law librarians Ohio has ever had. You have been recognized not only for your expertise in cataloging and technical services, but also regarded as a talented and accomplished law librarian in every aspect of law librarianship." Mr. Fu went on to tell of a not-so-secret secret regarding an offer Miss Miller had, and declined to accept, to work at the Harvard Law School Library, possibly the only librarian ever to turn down an offer from Harvard.

William Crowe, Assistant Director for Technical Services, Ohio State University Libraries, praised Nancy Miller's example with more than a little awe. "I have but a fraction of the experience and sagacity which you possess and hope only that as I reach the completion of my term of active service I have half of your enthusiasm, good humor, and dedication to the ideals of our profession. You have set an excellent example for us all."

Nancy Miller will be missed. Her warm smile and ready help will be felt by others as she surely involves herself in projects in the community. Former Dean Ivan Rutledge summed it up for all of us when he noted "I'm moved to write of my hope that you'll go right on charming others with your serenity and that you retire only from assuming burdens that don't merit your attention."

Bon Voyage, Nancy Miller!

Twenty-Seven Years of Library Changes

As chief cataloger for a collection that has grown from 150,000 volumes in 1959 to some 465,000 in 1986, Nancy Miller has seen changes both in the type of material in our collection and in the way in which the cataloging of that material is done. In the late 1950's the collection was founded on traditional treatise materials organized according to such subjects as criminal law, torts, constitutional law, contracts. In the 1960's and 1970's there was a shift to interdisciplinary additions, publications in economics, sociology, political science, and other fields which tangentially relate to the law. Now, in the 1980's there are whole new fields to consider with issues like ethics in computer law, toxic waste, conservation and environmental concerns of pollution of air and water...areas not even contemplated when Professor Pollack developed his unique classification system, and not to be embraced by that system.

As the collections changed, so, too, did the methods of cataloging. From a primitive, manual system, requiring that every entry in the card catalog be separately typed and sorted, the library has moved to the electronic age of bibliographic utilities like the Online Computer Library Center, (OCLC), headquartered in the Columbus suburb of Dublin, and Research Libraries Information Network, (RLIN), at Stanford University, which use computer networks to access instantly information and research done by all members. Many more cross-references are possible with on-line capability. Miss Miller sees in all the new technology expansive opportunities for technical services.

Change at the Helm

With the impending June retirement of Professor Ruth Kessler, Director of the Law Library, the College mounted a national search for a successor in the distinguished tradition of the past forty years when the Library was directed by Ervin Pollack (1947-1972), Mathew Dee (1973-1983), and Ruth Kessler (1985-1987).

Alan Holoch, currently Director of the Law Library and Associate Professor of Law at Villanova University School of Law, has been named to the post of Director. He has his undergraduate degree from Washington University and his library science and law degrees from the University of Southern California. The College looks forward to the leadership of Professor Holoch as he assumes his official duties on June 15.

LAWRENCE D. STANLEY PROFESSORSHIP ESTABLISHED

Friends and colleagues speak of the late Lawrence D. Stanley, member of the Columbus bar from 1930 until his death in August of 1985, with great respect and affection. "Lawrence's talent, self-confidence, and tenacity made him an extraordinary lawyer; he never went around problems, he went through problems," remarked Samuel H. Porter, '53, one of many lawyers who benefitted from association with Lawrence Stanley. "He enriched the lives of all he touched and I treasure the memory of our friendship," remarked Judge Joseph P. Kinneary, Federal District Court for the Southern District of Ohio.

Today, the College of Law shares with others as a beneficiary of the rare talents and personal qualities of this distinguished lawyer. Dean Francis X. Beytagh is proud to announce the establishment of the Lawrence D. Stanley Professorship of Law. "We are very pleased about the new Stanley professorship. There is no more fitting way to memorialize a truly outstanding Columbus lawyer," states Dean Beytagh. The professorship is to be held by a member of the faculty whose research and teaching concern the area to which Mr. Stanley devoted much of his career: the law, including the law of taxation, that relates to corporations and other business enterprises. Professor Michael D. Rose has been designated as the first recipient of the professorship, effective in the fall of 1987.

Lawrence Stanley grew up in the shadows of The Ohio State University. He attended North High School and received his undergraduate degree from Ohio State in 1927. He travelled east to study law at Harvard University where he received his LL.B. three years later. But Columbus would remain home.

He returned in 1930 to begin his legal career with the firm of Henderson, Burr, Randall & Porter. He married the former Sarah Carr Meyer, a graduate of the University of Illinois. Their daughter, Laura Stanley Gunnels, is a resident of Columbus and a graduate of Ohio State.

Under the tutelage of Sherman Randall (a grandson of OSU president William Oxley Thompson), Lawrence Stanley early established a reputation as a talented trial lawyer. He was one of the first lawyers to handle medical malpractice defense. By the early 1940's his practice became more and more business-oriented and clients like the Kroger Co. and the Jeffrey Co. left less time for the courtroom. As a respected business counselor Stanley served on the Boards of Directors of many corporations.

L. Jack Van Fossen, '63, chief executive officer of Chemlawn Services Corporation and former law partner of Lawrence Stanley's, recalls his special brilliance in law and business. "Lawrence was not only a consummate lawyer but was an excellent teacher of the many lawyers and entrepreneurial clients of his firm. His legal advice went beyond the legal nuances and was flavored by the practicalities of business and economic reality."

In the early 40's, Stanley became a principal in the law firm of Burr, Porter, Stanley & Treffinger, which at the time of his retirement in 1977 was Porter, Stanley, Platt and Arthur. This was one of the predecessors of the present-day firm of Porter, Wright, Morris & Arthur. Today, his influence on his many proteges remains intact. "Lawrence Stanley was the greatest lawyer I have ever met," said John A. Dunkle, '60, a firm partner. "He was so bright; so instinctively able to cut to the heart of the issue. Even today, I find myself asking 'What would Lawrence do with this problem,'" reflected Dunkle.

But Lawrence Stanley was more than a highly respected lawyer. He was a respected person. He is remembered as fair-minded, sensitive to the needs of others, a great story-teller, and a gracious host.

Lawrence Stanley was also an active man. He owned and was personally involved in the operations of a cattle ranch in Montana at which he would spend summer vacations. In other spare moments he enjoyed sailing. In more quiet hours he was a voracious reader and a student of such diverse subjects as trigonometry, astronomy, and Roman history. "Joe Platt (one of Stanley's principal partners) and Lawrence would talk mathematics over lunch and leave the rest of us far behind," remembers Sam Porter.

Lawrence Stanley's life at the bar represented the highest standards of professionalism. He was an excellent lawyer by virtue of his talent and hard work. He was a great lawyer by virtue of his love of the law. For Lawrence Stanley the sun rose and set on the practice of law. He was at home in the law and was respectful of it from the beginning to the end of his life. The Lawrence D. Stanley Professorship honors an outstanding lawyer and imparts a rare legacy to future generations of lawyers from The Ohio State University.

FACULTY NAMED TO DISTINGUISHED POSITIONS

Professor Robert J. Lynn, '48, has been named to assume the newly created John D. Drinko-Baker & Hostetler Chair in Law. Professor Lynn, highly respected colleague and teacher, appropriately will become the holder of the College's first endowed Chair.

The College is fortunate to have the opportunity to give recognition to Professor Lynn, a 1948 graduate of the law school, who has been a major contributor to life at the College by his professional service on the faculty since 1951.

Professor Lynn received his undergraduate education at Ohio State, finishing in 1942 with a major in accounting. After service in World War II he began the study of law at the University of Chicago. He finished his law studies in 1948 at Ohio State. Concurrently he was teaching in the College of Commerce and through that experience realized that he wanted to teach in a law school. He went to Yale Law School to do graduate study leading to a J.S.D. in 1952, completing his dissertation on "The Rule Against Perpetuities." He has produced scholarship in the property field ever since. He returned to Yale as a visitor on the faculty in 1957. In 1965 he taught during the fall semester at the law school at UCLA.

Professor Lynn plans to continue to teach, research, and publish in the areas of pensions, insurance law, and estates. He is currently completing an article entitled "Will Substitutes, Divorce, and Statutory Assistance for the Unthinking Donor." His most recent book is The Pension Crisis, published in 1983.

Professor Lynn was the recipient in 1983 of the Ohio Bar Foundation award for outstanding research in law and government. In 1978 he was named James S. Shocknessey Professor of Law. It is fitting that he receive the honor of being named to the first Chair in the College of Law.

Professor Michael D. Rose has been designated to assume the newly created Lawrence D. Stanley Professorship of Law. It is appropriate that a scholar of his caliber be appointed to a position honoring such a consummate lawyer as Lawrence Stanley. Like Mr. Stanley, Professor Rose is a meticulous craftsman, a talented lawyer with the ability to sort through myriad complexities and make them clear to others.

Professor Rose studied at Ohio Wesleyan University, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, graduating in 1959. He studied economics at Northwestern before deciding to go to law school. At Western Reserve Law School, from which he received his J.D. in 1963, he was editor-in-chief of the law review and a member of the moot court team. He began practice with the Columbus law firm of Porter, Stanley, Treffinger & Platt.

Professor Rose studied during 1966-1967 as a Kent Fellow at Columbia University School of Law, researching the regulation of property and casualty insurance rates, earning a Master of Laws degree in June 1967. Since joining the Ohio State faculty in 1967, he has distinguished himself in the field of taxation where he has become a highly respected scholar and tax-authority. During 1970-1971 he served as staff assistant to the Chief Counsel of the Internal Revenue Service and during 1978-1979 was visiting on the faculty at the University of Florida College of Law.

Since 1972 he has edited a widely-used compilation, Selected Federal Taxation Statutes and Regulations. He is co-author of a casebook on corporate taxation and is completing a hornbook on federal income taxation.

On the twentieth anniversary of his joining the College of Law faculty, Professor Rose is a worthy recipient of the recognition the College bestows with the new professorship appointment.

COLLEGE WELCOMES NEW FACULTY

Professor Michael Braunstein

Experience with cajun cooking is part of what Professor Michael Braunstein brings to the College of Law. A native of New Orleans and a graduate of Louisiana State University and Tulane University School of Law, Professor Braunstein comes to Ohio via California and the open ranges of Wyoming. He joins the faculty as a tenured, full professor and will provide important depth to the property curriculum of the College. He is teaching first-year Property, Real Estate Finance, and Natural Resources Law.

Professor Braunstein received his law degree in 1974 and during his third year at Tulane was editor-in-chief of the law review. He began his legal career in San Francisco, California. In 1979 he returned to New Orleans where his practice was primarily in the areas of natural resources law and real estate development and finance.

In 1981 his latent interest in teaching and research was awakened by an offer from the University of Wyoming Law School. His interest in natural resources law fit well into the curriculum emphasis at Wyoming, influenced by the importance of the state's mining activities. While at Wyoming Professor Braunstein became a Trustee in the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation and has continued his activities with the Natural Resources Section of the American Bar Association. He currently serves as Vice-Chair of the Coal Sub-Committee.

He is co-author of teaching materials published in 1987 as Mineral Rights on Public Lands: Hard Rock Mining, Anderson Publishing Co. and has written a number of law review articles. During 1984-85 he was Visiting Professor at the University of California at Los Angeles School of Law. Professor Braunstein's teaching has included Trusts and Estates, Estate Planning, Consumer Protection and Jurisprudence.

Professor Braunstein's practice involved putting together real estate syndications, sale and lease-back transactions, and other financing arrangements. He quickly acknowledges that real estate finance runs on a fast track. "As a professor, I try to stay current with new security devices and means of financing by keeping in touch with practicing lawyers," says Braunstein. "I like to bring lawyers into my classroom to discuss some of the new and interesting financing techniques being used," he explains. He describes his Natural Resources course as a mix of nuts and bolts with public policy issues. "I think students should appreciate some of the historical precedents to modern day law and policy. For instance, in the east, most resource development takes place on privately held lands. In the west, mining involves principally publicly owned lands. How ownership affects resource extraction law provides a good opportunity for comparative analysis," states Braunstein.

Other interests involve advanced computer technology. Professor Braunstein is working on an on-line data program covering law school curricula. He also is completing an article applying economic analysis to part performance under the Statue of Frauds.

Professor Braunstein and his wife have settled into Columbus and are very positive about their new residence. "I love Columbus; it has a lot to offer in cultural activities within the community and the University, lots of interesting restaurants, and many attractive and reasonably-priced housing opportunities," says Braunstein. The students also get high marks in his description as "very bright and generally hard-working." "I am pleased about my move," reflects Braunstein. The feeling is mutual.

Professor David Williams

After earning five degrees in higher education Professor David Williams has decided he has been cured of his case of perennial student syndrome. Instead, he will stand on the other side of the podium teaching courses in Tax and Business Associations. He comes to Ohio State from the University of Detroit School of Law and the big-eight accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand.

Williams was graduated from Northern Michigan University with a B.S. in Social Science and returned to the University to develop programs for the growing number of minority students on the campus. While he was there he pursued a master's degree in Education. He derived great satisfaction from working for ten years with middle school students in the Detroit inner city. He found the young teenagers he taught and coached to be eager to learn and looking for leadership.

While he was teaching he took courses every semester at the University of Detroit and discovered an attraction to those in the business and tax area, leading to an M.B.A. He further developed that interest by earning a law degree in 1982 from Detroit where he was managing editor of the Michigan Tax Law Journal and winner of the best oral advocate award in moot court competition. He then took an LL.M. in Taxation from New York University School of Law.

Professor Williams would like to develop a course in sports law with a possible seminar in a specialized area like the representation of or tax planning for sports professionals. "Financial planning has been regarded as a dirty area for lawyers," he notes, "but we shouldn't leave all the education to the business schools." Since the Physical Education Department at Ohio State currently offers a master's degree in Sports Administration, he thinks that a natural extension would include coursework in negotiation, anti-trust, and tax ramifications for sports professionals.

His current writing includes a manual for students on how to find one's way through the tax code using a flow-chart approach. Williams thinks that a student who understands the mechanics of the code can then apply the strategies of issues analysis to problems in taxation. He also hopes to research the correlation between tax exemption for organizations and their money-making activities to determine what is and what is not unrelated business income. A third area of interest is the impact of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 on the development of low-income housing in particular and the custom of stimulating social programs through the tax system in general.

Professor Williams is readily making the adjustment from the aggressiveness of a downtown, industrial-city student body to the more subdued atmosphere in Columbus. The College community and the friendly and bright students have been most welcoming to him and have provided him with conversation, tennis, and jogging companions, satisfying his intellectual and athletic interests.

VISITORS BRING VARIETY TO THE COLLEGE

A return to Columbus was one of the motivating factors in Jeffrey Ferriell's visit to Ohio State from Ohio Northern University, Pettit College of Law. He grew up in Columbus and took an undergraduate degree in Education from Ohio State, finishing in 1975. "I enjoy returning to family and friends and especially the growing city with all it has to offer," says Ferriell.

He was comments editor of the law review at Santa Clara University School of Law from which he was graduated in 1978. He then went on to take an LL.M. at the University of Illinois, concentrating on the Uniform Commercial Code courses.

Professor Ferriell teaches in the commercial area, specializing in the Code courses and Debtor-Creditor Rights. His writing is almost exclusively in the debtor-creditor area. He is soon to have published an article entitled "Core Proceedings in Bankruptcy Court." He is currently at work on an article on the "Constitutionality of the Bankruptcy Amendments and Federal Judgeship Act of 1984." At the College he is teaching a section of Contracts, Commercial Paper, Debtor-Creditor, and a Bankruptcy Seminar. He serves the profession as Chair-elect of the Association of American Law Schools Section on Debtor-Creditor Rights.

David E. Shipley brought his southern-born wife and daughter to Columbus for the year to introduce them to the mid-west of his roots and to show them snow. While his roots and family are nearby, there has been less snow here than at his home law school at The University of South Carolina.

Professor Shipley was graduated from Oberlin College and the University of Chicago Law School, where he was executive editor of the law review. He has been at South Carolina since 1977 and a full professor since 1985. In 1983-1984 he visited on the faculty of the Marshall-Wythe School of Law, College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Virginia.

At Ohio State he is teaching Family Law, Civil Procedure, and Administrative Law, which he teaches at South Carolina along with courses on Copyright and Intellectual Property. His recent research has been in the field of intellectual property and his article "Copyright Protection for Architectural Works" appears in Vol. 37, No. 3, South Carolina Law Review (1986). He argues that the architect has an interest to be protected in the completed structure as well as in the blueprints.

"Copyright Law in Your Neighborhood Bar and Grill" considers whether commercial establishments violate performance rights when they play radio or television programs on enhanced equipment. The article will be published in Arizona Law Journal this year.

He is currently at work on an article about the telecast rights to their performances that professional athletes might have outside of contract rights with their clubs.

From Oxford, Mississippi with a population of ten thousand to Columbus, Ohio with a population of nearly one million is a big change for Deborah Bell, visiting Assistant Professor from the University of Mississippi Law School. "I like to visit every three or four years to get a fresh perspective and exposure to bigger cities."

Professor Bell is a 1975 graduate of Mississippi College, in Jackson with a degree in English and Social Work. She studied law at the University of Mississippi where she was editor-in-chief of the 1978-1979 Mississippi Law Journal. After graduation she clerked for Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of the Fifth Circuit of the United States Court of Appeals. In 1980-1981 she was staff attorney for Atlanta Legal Aid where she honed her interest in housing and consumer issues.

At Ohio State for the spring semester, Professor Bell teaches courses in Commercial Paper and Secured Transactions. In addition to these courses, her teaching load at Mississippi includes courses in Property, Real Estate Transactions, Housing, and The Legal Problems of Indigents. She serves on the Board of Directors of the Northern Mississippi Rural Legal Services.

International Scholars Add Breadth

Nasila Rembe, visiting for the spring semester, has been on the Faculty of Law, University of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, since he was graduated from there with both an LL.B. and LL.M. in 1974. He has been on extended leave from Dar es Salaam to teach at the National University of Lesotho in southern Africa. Professor Rembe's areas of teaching are International Law and Comparative Law among the major legal systems of the world. At Ohio State he is teaching International Law and leading a seminar in Human Rights in Africa.

Professor Rembe has had many opportunities for international study, taking a Ph.D. at the University of Wales Institute of Science and Technology in 1977, studying as Visiting Scholar at Columbia Law School and the Columbia Center for the Study of Human Rights in 1981-1982, and spending a summer at the Institute of International Law and International Relations, University of Graz, Austria, in 1985. "Libraries and research facilities are virtually nonexistent in Africa; thus, scholars and teachers must visit elsewhere to keep current," he explains. Professor Rembe is impressed with the curiosity of the students at the College of Law. The rapid changes occurring in Africa are hard to tabulate by Africans and are nearly unknown by western scholars and students, but exchanges help to create mutual understanding. "The conceptions of human rights are different for western and African societies," notes Rembe.

Of interest to Professor Rembe is the different understanding students in Africa and the United States have of concepts of comparative law. In Africa customary law has as much weight as statutory law. Statutory law may be based on concepts of common law, civil law, socialist law, and various forms of religious law. He enjoys the opportunity of exploring those concepts with Ohio State students.

Ms. Liu Shoufen, a teacher and research fellow at the Division of Criminal Law of Peking University in Beijing, China has come to the College for the second semester as a Visiting Scholar under the auspices of the Committee on Legal Education Exchange With China, headquartered at Columbia University School of Law. Ms. Liu intends to study in the field of Criminal Law, particularly the interplay of Constitutional Law and Criminal Procedure in the United States.

She is an editor of the Chinese periodical, Jurisprudential Journal and a prolific writer, publishing some thirty articles in the field. She is an active practitioner in the Beijing Criminal Courts.

Ms. Liu is working with Dean Beytagh and Professors Herman and Quigley. She will have the opportunity to work with the students in the Criminal Law Practicum, who work on the legal problems of persons accused of minor crimes. The students will, in turn, have exposure to comparative study in Criminal Law.

FACULTY COLLOQUIA PROVIDE INTERCHANGE

During the academic year, faculty members and other scholars periodically offer noon-time presentations to their colleagues over a broad range of topics, focusing especially on subjects on which they are currently working. Professor P. John Kozyris coordinates this program.

This year's faculty colloquia have included the following: The Honorable Justice Eugene Ubaezonu of the High Court of Enagu, Nigeria, "Aspects of Constitutionalism in Nigeria;" Konstantine Kerameus, 1978 Visiting Professor from Athens Law School, "A Lawyer Looks at Common Law Procedure;" David Shipley, Visiting Professor from University of South Carolina School of Law, "Copyright Law and Your Neighborhood Bar & Grill — Performance Rights Under the 1976 Act;" Patric Hendershott, John Galbreath Chair in Finance, Ohio State, "A Professor Grades the Tax Reform Act of 1986;" Howard Fink, Ruth Kessler, and Library Staff, "Computer-Assisted Instruction and Audio-Visual Aids;" Michael D. Rose, Allan Samansky, and David Williams, "The Tax Reform Act of 1986: Implications for Planning by Faculty;" Jeffrey Ferriell, Visiting Professor from Ohio Northern University, Pettit College of Law, "Constitutionality of Bankruptcy Courts;" Mark V. Tushnet, Georgetown University Law Center, "The Critical Legal Studies Movement;" Leroy Pernell, "Implications of Mandatory Drug Testing of Student Athletes at State Universities;" Paul A. O'Connor, Fulbright Scholar at the University of Michigan from University College Dublin, "U.S. Constitutional Jurisprudence and the Development of Irish Constitutional Law;" James E. Meeks, "The Changing Scene in Public Utilities."

Critical Legal Studies

Editor's note: At one of the faculty colloquia for 1986-1987, Professor Mark V. Tushnet, of Georgetown University Law Center, discussed a controversial theory of challenge in law and legal education, Critical Legal Studies. The following remarks are in explanation of that theory which is finding its way onto the campuses of the nation's law schools.

Critical Legal Studies is a movement which uses critical theory in analyzing the role of law in society. Drawing heavily on the tradition of some major European social theorists, Critical Legal Studies can be viewed as a leftist reaction to mainline theory, much as "law and economics" can be considered the conservative response.

Critical Legal Studies is a movement more radically egalitarian than the New Deal and the Civil Rights movements of the 1960's. Critics charge that it presents no moral or theoretical agenda, no social theory of change. CLS responds that there is nothing about moral or social theory that makes it a prerequisite for leftist thought.

Tushnet discussed in some detail what he called the "four strands" of CLS. All urge adherents to take political action without worrying about large-scale theory to back them up.

The easiest, and least sympathetic for Tushnet, is the romantic view of human nature most thoroughly based in the tradition of European social thought: that under appropriate social circumstances, people's natures will lead them to support an egalitarian society. Present arrangements distort natural personality. If those distortions were removed, the natural order would be egalitarian.

The next strand draws on a pragmatism and tries to provide a basis for leftist politics with deep-rooted human interest in liberation. Philosophical anthropology shows a deep-rooted interest in technical control of the world. It identifies strategic places to conduct leftist politics. Its theoretical justification is based on philosophical anthropology.

A third, and more modest approach, is purely political pragmatism. It takes as a given that CLS is leftist and that those associated with CLS want more egalitarianism. Its purpose is to eradicate illegitimate hierarchy. If one does not perceive oneself to be subjected to an illegitimate hierarchy then CLS has no role for that person under this strand. It is not a part of this third position that all who are subjected to hierarchy perceive that hierarchy as illegitimate nor that all with experience of illegitimate hierarchy will lean to the left. Some might in fact lean to the right. Such pragmatism is localized to a particular audience. There is no major social theory backing this position. A local problem suggests local proposals.

The fourth branch also rejects the need for grounding in theory. It has no assumption of leftist commitment for CLS. It states that there is nothing inherently leftist about European deconstructionism. Instead it opposes whatever the existing order is. Its purpose is to assure that no illegitimate hierarchical strata will congeal. Its aim is opposition to the permanent political program. There is no program but critique. No constructive program can permanently replace opposition under this strand. Furthermore, any notion of truth, which is what scholars are trying to ferret out, ought to be contestable under CLS. The commitment of people to the Critical Legal Studies movement is to criticize all theories, including CLS. There may be short term responses to problems, but under the fourth strand there is no long term vision. All is subject to criticism.

NEW PROVOST SHARES OPTIMISM

Myles Brand, Vice President for Academic Affairs and Provost, has quickly adjusted to his new position as chief academic officer of The Ohio State University. One of his early priorities was to familiarize himself with the diversity of the academic community. At the invitation of Dean Beytagh he met with the law faculty on October 15. "In a comprehensive University you must be sensitive to differences among the Colleges," stated Provost Brand on his visit to the law school.

The provost predicted that over the next five to ten years public institutions would sort themselves out between preeminent institutions getting stronger and good institutions growing weaker. There will be little room for status quo in higher education. In his remarks the Provost conveyed a genuine optimism that

Ohio State is on the "right upward track" and is making significant progressive gains. He challenged the faculty to their role in achieving a comprehensive high rating for the College among the nation's law schools. The Provost discussed some of the challenges being met to improve the physical resources of the University and to create an environment for innovative, quality research. He related various University faculty and funding programs to the specific interests of the College of Law, acknowledging the important position the law school can play within the University.

FACULTY NEWS

Barbara A. Ash completed a visit to the University of Texas where she taught Business Associations for the summer term. She also had published an analysis of Randall v. Loftsgaarden in the ABA's Public Education Division journal previewing Supreme Court cases, 16 Preview of United States Supreme Court Cases 453 (1986).

Professor Ash is in the second of a three year term as a member of the University's Committee on Patents and Copyrights. This year the committee will conduct a review of the two-year interim policy which was developed by the Ad Hoc Patent Committee of which she was a member. She is now the Chair of the Academic Affairs Committee for the College of Law.

Daniel C.K. Chow will have his article "Rethinking the Act of State Doctrine: An Analysis in Terms of Jurisdiction to Prescribe" appear in the forthcoming 62 Washington Law Review (1987).

The article is a comprehensive reexamination of the act of state doctrine, which is a judge-made federal doctrine regulating the exercise of judicial decision-making in cases involving acts of a foreign sovereign. The article argues that current act of state jurisprudence is confused and in urgent need of reform. The article goes on to propose and defend a new conception of the act of state doctrine based on the modern principles of international law that govern the exercise and recognition of a nation-state's proper lawmaking authority.

Nancy Erickson is the Distinguished Visiting Richard J. Hughes Professor of Law for the 1986-87 academic year at Seton Hall University School of Law in Newark, New Jersey. Her article "Legal Education: The Last Academic Bastion of Sex Bias?" is to appear in 10 Nova Law Journal (1986). She serves as newsletter editor of the Association of American Law Schools Section on Women in Legal Education. She also founded the Society for the Study of Women in Legal History.

Howard Fink continues work on the second edition of Fink and Tushnet, Federal Jurisdiction: Policy and Practice. At the 1987 meeting of the Association of American Law Schools he represented Ohio State at the House of Representatives and chaired a roundtable of the Section on Civil Procedure dealing with sanctions against attorneys under Federal Rules 11, 16, and 37 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Professor Fink continues as Chair of the College's Planning Committee which is reviewing the needs and possible solutions for the Law Building expansion project. Next summer he will teach again in the fourth pre-law program at Somerville College of the University of Oxford.

David Goldberger has been reelected General Counsel to the American Civil Liberties Union of Ohio. In November he served as a panelist in a discussion of the constitutionality of affirmative action in a symposium on the United States Constitution held at Northwestern University Law School and sponsored by the Federalist Society.

Professor Goldberger has recently completed an article entitled "First Amendment Constraints on the Award of Attorney's Fees Against Civil Rights Defendant-Intervenors: The Dilemma of the Innocent Volunteer," which is to appear in the Ohio State Law Journal. He lectured on the First Amendment to a freshman class at Buena Vista College in Iowa. The lecture and student questions were transmitted between WOSU-TV and Buena Vista College by satellite and telephone.

Arthur F. Greenbaum recently published an article entitled "Putting Your J.D. to Work: Advice for Students Seeking Law Firm Employment," 47 Ohio State Law Journal 697 (1986). His exploits as "the singing law professor," previously chronicled in the National Law Journal, were covered in the September 1986 issue of the ABA publication Student Lawyer.

Sheldon W. Halpern has completed an article entitled "Application of the Doctrine of Commercial Impracticability:

Searching for The Wisdom of Solomon." It deals with the difficult doctrinal and judicial capability problems which arise when excuse from performance of contractual obligation is sought because of severely disruptive events not expressly embraced by contract terms. The article will be published in 1987 in the University of Pennsylvania Law Review. His article "The Right of Publicity: Commercial Exploitation of the Associative Value of Personality," was published in 39 Vanderbilt Law Review, No. 5 (1986).

John P. Henderson served as a member of the faculty for the annual orientation meeting for new law school admission officers, sponsored by the Law School Admission Council and held in Philadelphia in September 1986. He also attended the annual meeting of the Midwest Association of Pre-law Advisors at Indiana University in October 1986 as liaison with Law School Admissions Officers.

Dean Henderson coordinated receptions in four Ohio cities during December for alumni to meet with outstanding applicants for the class entering in August 1987. He has coordinated Continuing Legal Education Programs on "Creative Pension Strategies" and "Tax Planning for Closely Held and Personal Service Corporations and Their Owners -- Post Tax Reform Act of 1986."

Lawrence Herman has participated for the past three summers in Professor Fink's program for pre-law students in Oxford, England. Professor Herman is now working with Professor Fink to establish a summer program for law students at Oxford.

He is chairing the University's Distinguished Teaching Awards Committee and urges alumni to participate in the nominating process. He also chairs the College's Committee on Promotion and Tenure.

In October he attended a meeting of the Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union and completed his sixth and final term as General Counsel of the Union. In November he testified before the Ohio House Judiciary Committee on the subject of electronic eavesdropping.

Professor Herman continues as Moot Court advisor and accompanied Ohio State's National Moot Court Teams to the regional arguments in Cleveland. The Cleveland competition was won by a team from Ohio State, which competed in the Final Round in New York in January.

In December Professor Herman participated in a panel discussion on the new United States Supreme Court, sponsored by the College's Women's Law Caucus. He also made a presentation to a University committee considering the problem of drug testing of athletes. In the interstices he is trying to prepare the footnotes for an article on police interrogation.

Louis A. Jacobs has had his book, Litigating Age Discrimination Cases, with Andrew J. Ruzicho as co-author, published by Callaghan & Co. (1986). He also spoke on age discrimination law and practice at the Litigating Age Discrimination Seminar in New Orleans in December.

Professor Jacobs has lectured in Cincinnati at the Personnel Law Update 1986, sponsored by the Council on Education in Management, and in Columbus at the Personnel and Employee Relations Update Seminar, sponsored by the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, on "What Employers Should Know About Libel, Slander, and Emotional Distress in Employment."

He has filed two amicus briefs, one in the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit on the relationship between a jury verdict on an employment discrimination claim and the judge's decision on a related claim, the other in the Franklin County Court of Appeals on whether common law tort claims have been preempted by Ohio's statutory remedy for sexual harassment.

In January he was the guest on a radio call-in program, discussing the rights of employees. In February he participated in the Upper Arlington High School Colloquium on the Constitution's Bi-Centennial, speaking about the right of Congress to condition federal highway funds on a State's adoption of a certain drinking age. In March he ran a workshop in Columbus on civil rights in the workplace at a program sponsored by the Coalition of Labor Union Women.

An Information Release on pending employment discrimination issues has been published to supplement The Equal Employment Compliance Manual, published by Callaghan & Co., and a case law supplement has been submitted for release in June. Professor Jacobs continues as co-author of a monthly newsletter on equal employment opportunity.

Timothy Stoltzfus Jost is currently working on a casebook on Health Law which will be published by West Publishing Company in early 1987. His article entitled "From Swift to Stotts and Beyond: Modification of Injunctions in the Federal Courts" appeared in Vol. 64, No. 4 Texas Law Review (March 1986), published in December. An article he wrote on the Attorney General's Policy on Consent Decrees for the Administration Conference will appear in two different forms in the A.B.A. Administrative Law Review for January and in the A.B.A. Journal of Litigation later in 1987.

P. John Kozyris prepared a summary of recent developments in Conflict of Laws which was included in the American Association of Law Schools Section Newsletter. He also wrote an article in Greek entitled "Affirmative Action and Equality: The American Doctrine and Experience" for inclusion in a special issue of the Greek Review of European Law dedicated to the memory of D. Evrigenis.

Professor Kozyris's immediate writing projects include articles on "Choice of Law for Products Liability" and on "A Proposal to Protect Shareholder Interests in Takeovers Through Amendments to Federal Securities Law." Outside the College he has been active with the Greek community in Ohio to raise funds to create a second professorship of Modern Greek at Ohio State.

James E. Meeks delivered a paper entitled "The Antitrust Vulnerability of the Regulatory Process" at the Annual Convention of the National Association of the Regulatory Utility Commissioners in Phoenix in November 1986. He also conducted four hours of seminars on "Antitrust in the Public Utilities Industries" for the Ohio Office of Consumers' Counsel in November.

In December he delivered a paper entitled "Antitrust Issues in Bulk Power Supply" at the 18th Annual Conference of the Institute of Public Utilities, sponsored by Michigan State University and held in Williamsburg, Virginia.

Professor Meeks has been appointed Chair of the new committee on Curriculum and Research of the Association of American Law Schools.

Lee Modjeska has been nominated by the College of Law for the Ohio State University Distinguished Scholar Award. His article "Labor and the Warren Court," excerpted from a book in progress, was published in 8 U.C.-Berkeley Industrial Relations Law Journal 479 (1986), and his article "The NLRB and the Mob" was published in 37 Labor Law Journal 625 (1986).

Professor Modjeska is currently writing a comprehensive treatise entitled Employment Discrimination Law 2d, to be published in Spring 1988, and an academic textbook entitled Labor Law. He has articles in progress on labor racketeering as well as on recent Supreme Court decisions in the labor and employment areas.

Earl Finbar Murphy attended a meeting in July 1986 of the Legal Advisory Group of the Joint Task Force on Ohio's Groundwater Strategy of the Ohio Environmental Protection Administration, the Ohio Department of Natural Resources, and the Ohio State Fire Marshall. He attended the 21st Marine Law Institute Conference, sponsored by the Marine Law Institute of the University of Hawaii and the School of Law of the University of Miami, held in July 1986 in Bal Harbour, Florida.

In October Professor Murphy delivered a paper "Euclid and the Environment" at a seminar on "Euclid at Sixty: The Sixtieth Anniversary of Village of Euclid v. Ambler Realty Co.," held at the Lincoln Institute of Land Policy, Cambridge, Massachusetts. His paper will appear as a chapter in a book to be published in Spring 1987 based on the seminar proceedings. He contributed a chapter, "United States-Canadian Experiences in Combating and Controlling the Airborne Pollutants" to the book Transboundary Air Pollution: International Legal Aspects of the Cooperation of States, Flinterman, Kwiatkowska, and Lammers, eds, Dordrecht: Martinus Nijhoff, 1986.

Professor Murphy is on professional development leave for the academic year 1986-87. His main research and writing is being devoted to groundwater and property law. An article entitled "The Recurring State Judicial Task of Choosing Rules for Groundwater Law: How Occult Still?" is to appear in 66 Nebraska Law Review (1987). He is also researching the concept "What is Property."

Professor Murphy was renominated by his colleagues of the College of Law for the University Distinguished Scholar Award.

John B. Quigley has two articles in recent publication. "United States Legal Responsibility for Israel's Violation of Palestinian Rights" appeared in Vol. 3, No. 3 Mideast Monitor (1986). The thesis is that Israel commits violations of Palestinian civil and national rights, that Israel is financially dependent on the United States, and that under the law of state responsibility the United States is responsible for Israel's violations, inasmuch as it gives Israel economic and military aid aware that Israel uses substantial resources in violation of Palestinian rights.

"The United States Invasion of Grenada: Stranger than Fiction" is in Vol. 18, No. 2 Inter-American Law Review of the University of Miami (1987). The article is in rebuttal of the State Department justification of the October 1983 Grenada invasion and argues that the State Department manipulated the Organization of East Caribbean States for reasons of United States foreign policy.

Professor Quigley delivered a number of lectures during the fall semester. His paper "United Nations Reform: Response to International Terrorism" was given to the World Federalists of Central Ohio, the United Nations Association of Columbus, the Columbus Campaign for Arms Control, Worthington Senior Citizens, and Ohio Peacemaking Network. "The Changing Face of International Terrorism" was his topic before the College of Humanities, the Mershon Center, and the Center for Comparative Studies in the Humanities.

He presented "Latin American Drug Traffic" to a Youth Forum of the Columbus Council on World Affairs. The Columbus YWCA, Church Women United, and the League of Women Voters of Metropolitan Columbus heard him speak on "Legal Aspects of the Sanctuary Movement" and he spoke on "Immigration and Undocumented Entrants" to the Ohio Conference of the United Church of Christ.

Professor Quigley was a Tropical Lunch speaker for the University Department of Botany and Zoology with "The World Court: Nicaragua v. U.S.A.". To the International Law Society at the College of Law he addressed the "Legal Issues in the Arrest of Nicholas Daniloff." He lectured to Comparative Law students at Capital University Law Center on "Socialist Law" and was a participant in an Akron University Law School Symposium on United States Adherence to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. He was a guest on a radio call-in program on "The Bill of Rights" and the discussion expert for the Great Decisions Series topic "Foreign Affairs and the Constitution." After visiting the Soviet Union in January at the invitation of the Association of Soviet Lawyers he spoke on "Law Reform in the Soviet Union" on a radio call-in program and to the World Federalists.

Nancy Rhoden was promoted to Associate Professor with tenure, effective August 1986. She was also made the Ohio State University nominee for the American Association of University Women Young Scholar Award.

Professor Rhoden's publications include "Treating Baby Doe: The Ethics of Uncertainty" in the August issue of the Hastings Center Report and "The Judge in the Delivery Room: The Emergence of Court-Ordered Cesareans" in 74 California Law Review (1987).

Over the summer she gave speeches about ethical issues in obstetrics and neonatology at The Hastings Center, Hastings-on-Hudson, New York; at a meeting of the New York Association of Women Judges, New York City; and at Fort Worth Children's Hospital in Texas. This fall she addressed the annual meeting of the American Society of Law and Medicine in Boston.

Rhonda R. Rivera continues to direct the Legal Writing Program for the College although she is on leave for the academic year. She has been active in community education about Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. She has participated in seminars on "Legal Issues and AIDS" at the Columbus Coalition for Cost Effective Health Services, the Columbus AIDS Taskforce, Ohio State University Hospitals, the Metropolitan Community Church, the Columbus Bar Association Labor Law Committee, the Cincinnati Health Department, and a Miami, Florida conference, "The Challenge of AIDS."

Professor Rivera has lectured on the topics of "Human Sexuality" at Denison University and "Arbitration from the Arbitrator's Point of View" at the Office of the Ohio Attorney General. She serves on a grievance panel for the University Faculty Hearing Committee and served as a Ph.D. General Examiner for the History Department.

Nancy H. Rogers has completed the manuscript of a text for law students with her co-author, mediator Richard A. Salem, on legal, ethical, and policy issues raised in the use of mediation. Entitled A Student's Guide to Mediation and the Law, it will be published in 1987 by Matthew Bender. She has also written a chapter on the use of mediation that will be published in the 1987 revision of Baldwin's Domestic Relations. She continues work on a treatise for practising lawyers, also with co-author Richard A. Salem, entitled Mediation and Other Forms of Dispute Resolution, to be published by Lawyer's Cooperative Publishing Company.

In October Professor Rogers moderated a panel discussion at the National Conference of the Society for Professionals in Dispute Resolution held in Chicago. With the co-author of her treatise she has completed the first of a series of videotapes on mediation to be used in connection with their text. She was the speaker at the Hooding Ceremonies for the December graduates.

Allan J. Samansky and his co-author completed the second update, Supplement (December 1986) to their book Samansky and Smith, Federal Taxation of Real Estate, Law Journal Seminar Press (1985). The Supplement discusses the changes effected by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. A more comprehensive analysis of the Tax Reform Act will be contained in the next update which is scheduled for publication in Summer 1987.

Morgan Shipman has been appointed to the Board of Editors of Ohio Lawyer, a new magazine published by the Ohio State Bar Association. He continues as part-time Of Counsel to the Columbus-based firm of Vorys, Sater, Seymour & Pease, and continues as Chair of the College of Law Committee on Graduate Programs and as a member of the Visiting Committee of the Capital University Law School's Graduate Program in Taxation.

From June to November 1986 Professor Shipman was active in the drafting of, testifying for, and lobbying for enactment of Ohio Amen. Sub. H.B. 902 dealing with directors liability and indemnification and with takeover-related topics. This landmark legislation was enacted into law in November 1986. On December 16, 1986 his views on a portion of the Act were quoted in the New York Times. He also spoke on "Directors and Officers Liability, Indemnification, and Insurance" to a session co-sponsored by the Securities Law Committee of the Columbus Bar Association and the Central Ohio Chapter of the American Corporate Counsel Association. The Corporate Counsel chapter also heard him on "Insider Trading." He continues as an active member of the Corporation Law Committee of the Ohio State Bar Association.

Professor Shipman taught a three-week Torts course for minority students in the College's Skills Development Program and a small section of Torts last semester in which an innovation was the giving of an interim examination and reviewing each student's interim exam with him or her.

Douglas Whaley will see publication of Crandall & Whaley, Cases, Problems, and Materials on Contracts in March. His co-author is Thomas D. Crandall of the University of Denver School of Law. Professor Whaley is on sabbatical leave for the academic year and has been writing a Teacher's Manual for his new book, is writing an article on bankruptcy, and is beginning work on a multi-volume treatise on the Law of Commerce.

The Law Record regrets to report the death of Major General Albert M. Kuhfeld while vacationing with his wife in St. Petersburg. He was buried in Arlington Cemetery on March 26. General Kuhfeld served as Associate Dean from 1965 to 1973. Friends may write Mrs. Kuhfeld at 116 Piedmont Road, Columbus, Ohio 43214.

Charles Wilson was promoted to Associate Professor with tenure effective August 1986. He is currently at work on two articles in his field of Labor Law: "Application of the NLRB's Merger Doctrine to the Public Sector" and "Deferral to the Arbitration Process in Public Sector Labor Law." In addition to his Labor Law course, he taught Evidence during the autumn semester.

During the summer Professor Wilson assisted in teaching two workshops on Labor Arbitration for the Ohio Office of Collective Bargaining. He also taught in the three-week Skills Program with Professors Shipman, Pernell, and Williams.

Professor Wilson and his wife welcomed the arrival of their second son, Geoffrey Alan, on January 25, 1987.

NAMED CHAIRS AND PROFESSORSHIPS

The naming of Robert J. Lynn to the John D. Drinko-Baker & Hostetler Chair in Law and of Michael D. Rose to the Lawrence Stanley Professorship of Law adds to the manifestation of faith and generosity alumni and friends of the College of Law have shown in the past. Other named professorships enrich the College community by allowing it to attract and keep outstanding teachers and scholars. The professorships and their current holders are listed below.

John W. Bricker Professorship of Law, established in 1969, is currently held by Morgan Shipman.

President's Club Professorship of Law, established in 1969, is currently held by Lawrence Herman.

Newton D. Baker Professorship of Law, established in 1974, is currently held by Dean Albert L. Clovis.

James W. Shocknessy Professorship of Law, established in 1977, is currently held by Robert J. Lynn.

C. William O'Neill Professorship of Law and Judicial Administration, established in 1979, is currently held by Earl Finbar Murphy.

Joseph S. Platt-Porter, Wright, Morris & Arthur Professorship of Law, established in 1980, is currently held by Howard P. Fink.

THE DEAN'S CIRCLE

1985-86

"Each year the College of Law receives generous support from many alumni, friends, law firms, corporations, and foundations. In the past five years, we have given special mention to these donors by recognizing these gifts as part of The Dean's Circle. As we begin our Centennial Campaign, it is noteworthy that the number of donors in The Dean's Circle has increased significantly. This demonstrated support for the College of Law gives us great hope for a successful campaign. Our special thanks to members of The Dean's Circle."

ALUMNI GIVING

Cash gifts to the College of Law from alumni for the period July 1, 1985 to December 31, 1986, were $1,032,688.20 and represent 40% of the total contributions. Gifts were received from 1646 donors or 27% of all alumni of the College.

Reporting Methods

Alumni are listed by class and by giving club: Dean's Circle ($1,000+), Cum Laude ($500-999), Second Century ($200-499), Century ($100-199) and Contributors (less than $100 or by special request of larger donors). Also listed in this report as Contributors are President's Club members in deferred insurance programs. Premiums are not calculated in cash totals, but individuals are included in the participation ratio.

FRIENDS GIVING

Cash gifts to the College of Law from friends of the College, for the period July 1, 1985, to December 31, 1986, were $1,564,703.84 and represent 60% of the total contributions. Gifts were received from 299 donors.

Reporting Method

Friends are listed by giving clubs: Dean's Circle ($1,000 +), Cum Laude ($500-999), Second Century ($200-499), Century ($100-199) and Contributors (less than $100). * Asterisk designates corporate matching gifts.

The President's Club board as a backdrop for a fund-raising discussion held by Stuart Summit, '89, OSU President Edward Jennings, and Planning Committee Chair, Professor Howard Fink.

STUDENT SERVICES COORDINATOR

The title on the door of the office by the students' mailboxes says "Student Services Coordinator." When asked to describe her new position, Marilyn Baehr draws it as "hard to define because it is ever evolving. No day is the same as any other. It is a wonderful challenge!"

The program was initiated by Dean Beytagh this year to try to meet those needs that do not fit neatly into any other area. It is purposely open-ended to allow the students to draw on Marilyn Baehr's counseling and research background in order to have a variety of needs met. So far services have fallen into two broad areas: individual counseling for students who need help coping with stress, time management, financial aid, or child care, for example; and student organization coordination to help groups plan activities and to make certain that conflicting events are not scheduled at the same time, forcing students to choose between competing interesting activities.

Her third role is to coordinate between the College of Law and other parts of the University. Ms. Baehr has daily contact with the Graduate School, and offices responsible for fees and deposits, residency, commuter student affairs. She helps Law VII students, those taking a dual degree with another College within the University, to reconcile different calendars, registration and credit requirements, and the like.

Although academic counseling is generally left up to the faculty and deans, everything else having to do with students is within her purview for the present. She is a problem solver whose goal is to make students' lives less complicated — a tall order that she is fulfilling admirably.

STUDENTS WELCOME SPACE IMPROVEMENTS

Some problems should not have to wait for future solutions. This was the concern expressed by Dean Beytagh last year as he assessed the inadequate space available to students for informal interactions and breaks from the rigors of the books and the library. Until this fall students had table tops in the ground floor hallway on which to sit during moments of relaxation.

Today students enjoy a more spacious and nicely appointed lounge in the north end of the ground floor. The space was made available by relocating and squeezing student lockers. Students happily accept the trade-off of more locker congestion for the newly designated lounge area for seeing their friends and "down time."

Another attempt to make the College more inviting was the establishment of a lounge area in the hallway adjacent to the College Offices. Carpeting and furniture complement the remodeled entry to these offices. The changes were part of the reallocation of space for Registration and Reception Services.

Students relaxing amid plants and upholstered chairs in the newly refurbished lower level lounge.

Visitors and students alike appreciate the better lighted and more comfortable area to wait for appointments. Students also enjoy this area for moments between classes or for evening study.

Doing more with less has been the modus operandi in space planning at the College in recent years. Unfortunately, space options become more and more limited in the existing facility. The future holds exciting promise for ultimate space solutions.

BLUE-CHIP STUDENTS

In his Dean's Desk note Dean Beytagh has mentioned that the student body has historically been a strong one, that we are taking steps to diversify our student body while reducing overall size slightly, and that we have blue-chip students with notable participation in class and extracurricularly.

Rachelle Cohen, a first year student from Dayton, entering with a 1986 degree in Journalism from Ohio State, is herself one of these blue-chip students. She presents here a perspective on five of her classmates, each in his or her own way notable, both in class and extracurricularly.

Discussing politics over tea with Anwar Sadat, winning the Colombian National Tennis Championship at the age of 14, and studying Contracts in the Law Library don't seem to have a lot in common. Yet, for one Ohio State first year law student they are all the same - exciting challenges.

Claudia Porras adopted the United States as her home in 1980 when her father moved her family from South America so they could obtain top rate educations. Two weeks after arriving she jumped into her senior year of high school.

"I spoke few words of English and was just learning to hear and understand; speaking would come later," Porras explains. By going to grammar night school, continually reading, and keeping a dictionary nearby, Porras earned herself an "A" in her favorite course, American History, before she was fluent in English.

Mastering English was a new fight for Porras, but she was used to battling—on the tennis courts. Competing in more than fifteen international tennis tournaments, she had been Colombia's top-ranked player for five years. In Florida she earned herself an athletic scholarship at Miami Dade Community College, a national tennis power. After graduating with honors, Porras transferred to Eastern Kentucky University on full scholarship to play more tennis and to further her political science education.

Studying world politics had always been a dream to Porras. At the age of fourteen she had been so inspired by Sadat's peace initiative with Israel that she sent the Egyptian Embassy her national tournament trophy. "I wanted Sadat to know how much South American youth appreciated his unprecedented peace gesture." To her great surprise and delight, Sadat invited her to Egypt. Sadat's genuine concern for world affairs solidified her desire to pursue a career in international politics and law.

Columbus may not be as exotic as the streets of Cairo, but it's fine for Porras. After all, she just chalks it up as one more challenge.

From not quite as far as the hills of Colombia, Michael Rambert joins Ohio State from the busy city of Philadelphia. Leaving a lucrative position with a private economic development agency, Rambert is now "dealing" with books instead of multi-million dollar corporations.

While working with powerful businessmen Rambert realized that the people with the legal knowledge were the ones with the power to consummate or kill a deal. "At that point I knew I could never truly understand business without the legal strategy behind business and planning."

Viewing himself as a "deal-maker," he decided to return to law school so that he, too, could have the legal edge in business. With a bachelor's degree in economics and geography from Middlebury College and a master's degree with concentration in finance and real estate from The Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, Rambert was a fine candidate for any law school. Accepted everywhere he applied, including That School Up North, Rambert chose Ohio State.

One reason for his choice was his wife, Venita, who hails from the mid-west. Rambert said he had always lived on the east coast where everything was fast-paced and outwardly competitive. When he met Venita he liked her outlook and style, and based on her characteristics, decided to give the mid-west a try. He says he doesn't regret his decision at all.

"I am used to being around bright people, and people here are as intelligent as classmates out east," Rambert said. "Sometimes it makes me feel rather 'average,' but that is OK. I keep my same goal of striving to be competent. Keeping things in perspective and being competent are half the battle."

From the fast-paced east coast and from the relaxed small town of Manchester, Ohio, the College of Law attracts them all. "It was the only law school I wanted to attend, so I was glad to be accepted," said Todd McKenny, a magna cum laude graduate from Hiram College.

Unlike Rambert, McKenny doesn't crave a future of big business. Originally contemplating the ministry, McKenny finally chose to study law, an area where he feels he can best serve others. Serving others seems to be a theme in McKenny's life. Throughout his schooling he has accomplished this goal by being a good example.

As president of a number of campus organizations, a resident advisor for three years, and a varsity athlete in track and swimming, McKenny served the Hiram community well through his strong leadership. His impressive stack of titles, scholarships, and honors may make McKenny appear to be a super-achiever, but his friendly, easy-going personality exemplifies "the boy next door."

"I never joined anything with the intent of being the leader," McKenny said. "It just came about once I got involved with people; the more I was involved, the more I liked it, the deeper I got."

McKenny is interested in working for the government. He has studied politics and philosophy, seeing the two as working hand-in-hand. One day he hopes to be able to bring the two a little closer together in our society.

Using law as a tool to help improve society seems to be a common strand of many future lawyers at Ohio State. Yet, even without the degree, Heidi Johnson has been busy making her positive mark on society. As a spokesperson for the National Arthritis Foundation, Johnson has traveled across the country in speaking engagements, educating the public about arthritis, a disease that afflicts 37 million Americans.

Johnson was diagnosed at the age of eight with juvenile rheumatoid arthritis, a form of the disease that destroys the lining of joints, leaving the bones as victims to quick deterioration. Having a physical disability is sometimes misinterpreted by people. It is Johnson's goal to help erase erroneous conclusions about people with physical handicaps. "If disabled individuals are functioning out in the world, they have already accepted their disabilities," she said. "It is the public that now needs to accept them."

While at Kent State majoring in English, Johnson organized lectures for the student body. Besides helping to get such speakers as F. Lee Bailey, John Dean, and Dr. Ruth, she coordinated getting sign language interpreters for each lecture. "These are the types of actions that need to be undertaken to improve conditions for disabled people," Johnson explained. The United States has already come a long way, but she thinks that by working with legislatures and the media she can help the country progress even further.

Having overcome eight major surgeries, Johnson is a rare student in being able to say she is feeling her very best right now studying law at Ohio State. "I have jumped a lot of hurdles to get here, and once I have law as a resource, I think there is 'something special' out there for me to do."

Doing something special has become almost common-place in the fascinating life of one Ohio State graduate — Mike Wantuck. He, unlike most first year law students, is not only busy with the books, but busy on the diving board. A six-time All-American, Wantuck divides his time between studying law and diving in his last year of eligibility for Ohio State, the nation's top-ranked diving team.

"Sometimes it gets frustrating because I can't put 100 percent into everything," he explained. "That's why I try to work for 200 percent, but trying to live a normal life at the same time — that becomes impossible."

On a typical day Wantuck gets up at 6:30 a.m. to study and starts class by 9:00. Between classes he bikes to Larkins Hall to work out. He then returns to class before going back for more diving practice and weight lifting. By the time he gets home at 7:00 p.m. he admits to being drained mentally and physically, but there is still homework to do, moot court briefs to write, cases to analyze.

Living a rigorous lifestyle is nothing new to Wantuck, who is used to dividing his time and talents. Not only is he a student and a diver, he is also a performer. By the age of eleven, Wantuck was already a veteran of the stage. Traveling with such stars as Vincent Price and Sandy Duncan, Wantuck received rave reviews for his acting and singing. After completing high school he was forced to choose between a full scholarship in music or a scholarship in diving.

Wantuck, a Michigan native, originally chose to attend the University of Texas at Austin, where he could dive and major in music. A year later he transferred to Ohio State for a better diving program and a strong English department. Coming to Ohio State, Wantuck explained, was a way he could compete with the best, both athletically and academically. "When you put yourself in a situation surrounded by excellent people, you're bound to improve. It works that way in diving and in law school."

Although Wantuck's collegiate diving career is over in April, he plans to keep practicing for the 1988 Olympics in Seoul. He placed fifth at the 1984 Olympic Diving trials, but a performance as outstanding as his 1986 U.S. National Championship meet should earn him a spot on the 1988 Olympic team.

Of course not all Law I's are future Olympians, but it is no exaggeration to say that the Class of 1989 is full of outstanding students — people with such diversity and such a flare for life that it makes the first year law school grind almost fun.

INTERNATIONAL EXPERIENCES ENLARGE LAW SCHOOL WORLD

Keeping in touch with "the outside world" can be a challenge for law students who often lament the lack of time for reading even a daily newspaper. Fortunately, the technologies of communications and transportation open a larger universe than the blocks surrounding the College of Law. Visitors from other countries are frequent guests and students themselves travel abroad.

International Law Society

The International Law Society is one organization dedicated to pressing out the walls of the law school through the sponsorship of various programs. One such program last fall involved the visit of Professor Krateros Ioannou, dean of the law faculty at the University of Trace, Greece and Director of the Center of European and Economic International Law. The students welcomed back Professor Ioannou who had visited at the College during the fall of 1985 and who was in the United States on business. At the students' request, Professor Ioannou shared a comparative analysis of issues of sexual preference and the right to privacy. He used for this discussion reference to recent cases by the United States Supreme Court and cases decided under Article 8 of the European Covenant of Human Rights. Other programs with lawyers teaching at the College or visiting at the University are scheduled throughout the year.

College Sponsors Program Abroad

The fabric of a law school class today is a much richer tapestry of travel and work than that of classes even within the last decade. The College of Law is playing an increasing role in these experiences through programs offered in conjunction with the University of Oxford, England. Professor Howard P. Fink will offer the fourth annual Pre-Law Program coordinated with the Department for External Studies, University of Oxford. He anticipates that 18 college juniors and seniors will be enrolled. Current Ohio State law students in all three classes have shared this interesting experience.

This summer a new program has been added through the initiative of Professor Lawrence Herman. The Ohio State at Oxford Summer Law Program will afford 22 law students from several different law schools the opportunity to take two courses at St. Anne's College, Oxford. Professor Herman will teach Criminal Procedure: Police Evidence-Gathering Practices with a comparative law component and Dr. Christopher Whelan of the Center for Socio-Legal Studies, Wolfson College, Oxford, will teach Comparative Legal Profession.

Other opportunities are on the drawing board. The College and the University have opened explorations with the University of Genoa, Italy. In the near future Italian exchanges and programs may well be part of an expanding mosaic of international study to complement curricular offerings now available.

MOOT COURT

The 1986-87 National Moot Court Team had a very successful trip to Cleveland in November for the regional level of competition in the National Moot Court Competition. Members Smith Brittingham and Jay Jadwin were awarded First Place Team, and Jadwin was named Best Oralist in the final round. The other members of the team, Judith French-Berry and Jessica Mussman, received the award for Best Respondent's brief. Jadwin and Brittingham competed in the National Finals in New York, January 26-29. They are the first Ohio State team since 1975 to have won the regional competition, which includes law schools from Ohio and Michigan, although as second place finishers Ohio State has now competed in the National Finals for four consecutive years. Ohio State has won the National competition three times: in 1960 by John McDonald and Shelby Hutchins, in 1964 by Dale Williams and Arthur Fant, and in 1970 by Gary Greenwald and Grady Pettigrew. In addition two teams from Ohio State have been awarded best brief in the finals: the 1969 team of Charles Warner and Curt Griffith, and the 1970 team of Greenwald and Pettigrew.

The case argued by this year's team deals with subpoenas issued by a United States Attorney to two defense attorneys, seeking fee information and client identity about two grand jury targets. The subpoenas arguably violate the targets' fifth and sixth amendment rights to counsel, since the defense attorneys may later be called to testify at trial and be disqualified. Also at issue is a state disciplinary rule, identical to one recently adopted by Massachusetts, making it unprofessional conduct for a prosecutor to subpoena a defense attorney without prior judicial approval.

The National Moot Court Competition, in its thirty-seventh year, is sponsored by the Young Lawyers Committee of The Association of the Bar of the City of New York and by the American College of Trial Lawyers. Each team is required to write an appellate brief in a fictional case before the United States Supreme Court. All teams compete in a regional round of appellate argument (the country is divided into fourteen regions), with the brief score counting as 40% of the total head-to-head score, and the oral argument score counting as the remaining 60%. The top two teams in each region compete in the National Finals in New York. This year's National Final Round was judged by a distinguished panel including Justice Byron White.

PHOTOGRAPHER CUM LAW STUDENT

A North African in Paris. A parade of majorettes in Atlantic City. Two brothers in Columbus. These are some of the twenty black and white and color photographs on exhibit in February in Bricker Hall, the OSU Administration Building, in commemoration of Black History Month. These photographs, taken by third-year law student Linda Ammons, represent a small part of a portfolio developed over the past ten years.

Linda Ammons brought the law school community her rich background as television journalist and reporter, labor organization public affairs director, free-lance writer, college instructor, and photographer. She has a bachelor's degree in English from Oakwood College, Huntsville, Alabama, and a master's degree in Communications from Ohio State.

Ammons's attraction for the law was evident in her early career as a television general assignment reporter who covered consumer affairs issues and law related stories. On a regular basis she reported on the so-called feud between Governor George Wallace and Federal District Court Judge Frank Johnson, Jr. "It was not unusual for Governor Wallace to lambast Judge Johnson for 'making the law of Alabama rather than interpreting it.' This was in reaction to a number of rulings adverse to the Wallace administration handed down by the court. The quip in Alabama at the time, particularly by those who were against the federal court decisions, was that Frank Johnson, Jr., was running the state," explains Ammons.

While at the television station, Ammons remembers being "thrown out of the film editing room on a regular basis." It was there that she began to develop her photographer's eye. It was more fully developed when she began free-lance writing with articles about the Birmingham, Alabama bombing trial, entertainer interviews, and historical pieces about land-grant colleges. Her photographs accompanying these articles are a few of the number of published photos of landscapes, impressionistic effect or can enhance the colors, making them deeper, paler, or monochromatic.

Linda Ammons is always ready to photograph wherever she is. She notes, "I may have to buy a toothbrush, but I definitely have my events, and portraits which have appeared in text books, newspapers, and magazines.

As a reporter and writer she often had need for still photographs. For a while she had a partner from NBC, but after he was transferred to London she decided to learn to take the required photographs herself. With little formal training but with a great deal of experimentation and reading, she taught herself to be a prize-winning photographer. She has exhibited in the Ohio State Fair juried art show, the Public Library of Columbus and Franklin County, the Ohio Union, and most recently, at Bricker Hall.

Ammons photographs in black and white as well as in color. Some of her color work is treated with a laser process which can separate colors, distill them, and create an camera with me." Many of the photos in the Bricker Hall exhibition were taken in places where she has worked or studied. While teaching a writing course at Stockton State College in Smithfield, New Jersey, she had ample opportunity to observe people and their actions in nearby Atlantic City. During the summer after her first year of law school, when she was studying with the University of San Diego program in Paris, all of Europe was her subject. Then last summer, while she was an intern with the Reporters' Committee for Freedom of the Press, Washington, D.C. was her field. Indeed, wherever she goes in her pursuit of a legal career in the area of business, international, or first amendment law, one can expect to find Linda Ammons toting both a brief case and a camera bag.

GRADUATES AND FAMILIES SHARE IN COLLEGE FAREWELL

December 21 Hooding Exercises

Although College of Law students are part of the 52,000 student body enrolled on the Columbus campus of Ohio State University, their experiences are much more personalized within the environment of the College of Law. The Moot Courtroom, which for three years had been a laboratory for learning, on December 21 was the situs for accolades and well wishes to the first members of the graduating class of 1987 in a very personalized Hooding ceremony.

Seven men and women participated in the ceremonies for the investment of the Juris Doctor hood and the presentment of degree cases, soon to be filled with the official law degree of The Ohio State University. Professor Nancy Rogers was invited by the graduating class to present the Hooding remarks. She was introduced by Deborah Ann Wanger, a member of the graduating class. Professor Rogers spoke of the transition from student to member of the legal profession and the responsibilities and opportunities that new status would bring to each graduate. She related her remarks to the efforts now underway to simplify the judicial process and the choices those efforts present to the profession and individual lawyers. Because of the relevance of Professor Rogers' remarks to contemporary issues facing the profession, the text is set out for our general readership.

Larry R. Thompson, Special Assistant to President Edward Jennings and a 1969 graduate of the College, welcomed graduates to the College's Alumni Association. He invited their continuing involvement with the College and wished them success. Graduates, family members, and faculty concluded the occasion with a reception in the newly furnished College Office foyer. Congratulations to all members of the Class. Keep in touch. Good luck.

Simplifying the System of Civil Practice: A Case for Hard Choices and Caution.

Before you think ahead, I would like you to think back to your year of Civil Procedure. It is likely that this is the area of law in which you will have the greatest chance to have an impact. It is true that lawyers have traditionally been one of the groups having an impact on the development of many areas of law. But lawyers are the key actors in developing civil practice. For the most part, the civil practices developed by the courts in consultation with the bar have not been changed by the legislatures.

And, increasingly, key aspects are developed by local courts, at the behest of the local bar.

You may have thought a time or two during civil procedure, perhaps as you were sorting out res judicata or quasi in rem jurisdiction, that our system of civil procedure was too complex. Your chance to change this may present itself in only a few weeks. Wherever you begin practice, the chances are good that the local bar association will be considering proposals to simplify the system of civil practice for the "ordinary case." The view is widespread that the system has become too burdensome and too complex for the ordinary case. And these impressions are supported by research.

For example, a recent study by researchers at the University of Wisconsin Law School indicates that, if you hire a lawyer on an hourly basis, sue and win a judgement of less than $10,000, you have one chance in four of paying more to your lawyer than you are awarded. For these ordinary cases, the nominal winner is, one in four times, the real loser.

Let me describe one proposal to simplify:

All persons who have claims below a certain monetary amount will be required to have their first trial without the safeguards that make the system complex. There will be no requirement that the rules of evidence be followed, and no jury. The decision-maker will not be a duly appointed judge, responsive to the public, but rather someone moonlighting from another job, who will be paid by the parties on a fee per case basis. Any party dissatisfied with this simplified, few rights, procedure may file an appeal and obtain an entirely new trial, with a "real" judge, jury, rules of evidence, and right to appellate review of the decision.

Perhaps you think I am describing the mandatory, non-binding court arbitration that many bar associations have supported and local courts have adopted in the last few years. I am not. I am summarizing articles written earlier in this century describing the justice of the peace courts. But the description also fits court arbitration.

Professor Nancy Rogers

In fact, while the justice of the peace system was created for different reasons in the 1300's, the justifications given in this century for both systems are similar. Both mandatory processes are touted as less costly than traditional litigation for the court and the parties. Decisions are made more quickly than through traditional court processes. Because most parties do not request a trial de novo, court congestion is reduced. The hearings are simpler and more understandable for the parties.

Of course, there are a few differences. Justices of the peace are not always required to be lawyers, while court mandated arbitrators generally are. Occasionally, there are three hearing officers rather than one on the arbitration panel, though the trend has been to reduce that number to one in order to reduce costs and facilitate scheduling. These differences increase the chances of uniformity in court-mandated arbitration. However, another difference between the processes may have the opposite effect. Court-mandated arbitration often has a disincentive to appeal not present in the justice of the peace systems. For example, in one jurisdiction the party who asks for a trial de novo and fails to improve on the award by 10 percent may have to pay the opposing party's attorney's fees for the trial. Thus, the trial de novo is an even higher risk proposition under court-mandated arbitration than it was under the justice of the peace.

Still, the systems are similar enough that we ought to ask what has happened to the justice of the peace system. By the early part of this century, commentators were calling it the "injustice of the peace" system. The justices, who were at first the wisest and most respected members of the community, had often become merely the members of the community who needed a little extra income. Users complained of a lack of decorum, inconsistency, and a bias in favor of frequent users. They said that the right to a new trial was illusory. Most users could not afford two trials. They were worn down and worn out, in terms of time and money. And they pointed out that the public perception of justice was being formed by these moonlighters in their unsystematic courts of first resort, which usually became the courts of only resort.

By 1960, most states had either abolished the justice of the peace system or changed it so that the justices resembled regular judges in qualifications, salary, and procedures. If the real courts with real judges are too complex for the ordinary case, said the commentators, let's simplify commentators, let's simplify procedures slightly but maintain those rights that are really important at the first trial of the case...at the very least judges answerable to the public and the courts of appeals.

Of course, it is possible that the mandatory arbitration schemes will not degenerate as the justice of the peace system did. Studies indicate that arbitrators now are often persons of such a high caliber that they deliver decorum, consistency, and fairness even though there is nothing in the system to require it. And it is possible that this court of first and, for most, last resort will convey a high sense of justice for those using it.

But history at least suggests caution before turning to this or any other "quick fix" for the complexity of the civil practice system. History suggests that we need to face hard choices about simplifying discovery and trials so that the first trial we require of litigants is highly likely to safeguard at least their most basic rights.

Several of you have become highly skilled as negotiators and mediators as well as litigators. I suspect that these negotiating skills and a willingness to streamline the regular court processes for ordinary cases will respond better to the calls for a more simplified system than the quick fix of a mandatory first trial without procedural guarantees.

As you take on this responsibility for development of a system of civil justice, you have from me, and I think the rest of the faculty, our admiration for your years of hard work, our best wishes, our affections and our hope that you will tinker with the system, but tinker thoughtfully.

ALUMNI SERVE THE BENCH

"The legal historian Charles H. McIlwain has observed that the essential quality of constitutionalism is that 'it is a legal limitation on government; it is the antithesis of arbitrary rule.'" So opened Thomas J. Moyer, '64, on Monday, January 5, addressing those assembled to share in the official celebration of his November 1986 election victory. The occasion was the ceremony during which he was sworn in as the seventh Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio.

Tom Moyer has long demonstrated the art of avoiding arbitrary rule. His ability to listen to and weigh all aspects of an issue is widely recognized by colleagues whose philosophies may differ from his but whose respect for him is unflagging. He was a member of the Columbus

The Hon. Thomas J. Moyer

Board of Education during its most volatile period in the early 1970's. He earned the respect and admiration of those disparate members who elected him to two terms as president.

The Court has already benefitted from that experience. "Conference discussions have been good. The justices are all respectful of one another's opinions. I think we will be able to work together very well," he notes. "I sense a strong desire on the part of all of the justices to be cohesive. This is extremely important to the process of making decisions."

Moyer developed a penchant for appellate work early in his career when he served as an assistant to then Ohio Attorney General William B. Saxbe, '48, and argued the State's tax cases before the appellate and supreme courts.

Moyer leaves no doubt as to his view of the role of the judiciary. "Let me assure the leaders of the General Assembly that the new Chief Justice understands that judges are not legislators in robes."

Alumnus Accedes to Federal Bench

It might be a good idea to develop a habit of checking with your office while on vacation. James L. Graham, '62, has long followed that practice and during one of those calls from a parking lot pay phone, he learned that President Reagan had nominated him to the Federal Court for the Southern District of Ohio.

On November 17, 1986 Jim Graham took the seat vacated nineteen months earlier by Robert M. Duncan, '52. Judge Duncan administered the oath of office to Judge Graham. The ceremonies were well attended by 1962 classmates of Jim Graham's. Two, Benjamin L. Zox, President of the Columbus Bar Association, and Josiah H. Blackmore II, Dean of Capital University Law School, were participants, as was Duke W. Thomas, '64, Past President of the Ohio State Bar Association.

From his first day Judge Graham's docket was full of the year's worth of unassigned cases. He will have able assistance from Karen L. Martin, '78, whom he has appointed as one of his clerks.

Judge Graham brings to the bench twenty-four years of experience as a civil trial lawyer specializing in business litigation, products liability, and malpractice suits. He was trial counsel in the celebrated 1981 Mobil-Marathon Oil takeover case. He also brings with him a dedication to the honor of the bench. "I have aspired to spend part of my years on the bench since I began training to be a lawyer. I believe it to be one of the highest callings of our society."

Appellate Positions Filled

Moyer's election to the Supreme Court left a vacancy on the 10th District Court of Appeals on which he served. Peggy L. Bryant, '76, formerly sitting on the Franklin County Municipal Court bench, was appointed to fill the 10th District vacancy. The Hon. Alba Whiteside, '54, serving that court since 1970, has been elected chief judge of all twelve Ohio Courts of Appeals.

From National Council Chair

Dear Fellow Alumni:

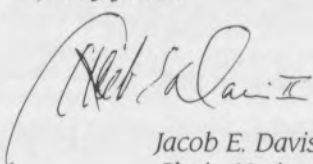

With pleasure I report to you the affirmative vote last fall to expand the National Council of the College of Law Alumni Association from 60 to 75 members and to provide for the election of interested non-alumni to serve in up to twenty percent of those seats. The expansion, and increased diversity of members inherent in it, will give us a broader perspective in fulfilling our missions of advising the Dean and of supporting the programs and policies of the College.

The National Council meets twice a year and serves as a form of "Kitchen Cabinet" to the Dean, reacting to proposals from the administration and assuming responsibilities which may help the College. Members are elected to staggered five-year terms at the Council's Spring meeting. They represent a wide range of professional experience. Through our collective involvement we offer the Dean a sounding board. This helps the College to be responsive to the needs of its alumni and to the profession generally.

The National Council was created in the 1960's to help Dean Strong begin a program of raising private funds to support student scholarships. Private giving makes the difference between a merely good and an excellent law school. Fund raising remains an important part of our work.

The Council stands ready to assist the Dean and the College in many ways. As we carry out our several tasks, we welcome any ideas you may have to enhance the efforts of this important part of your Alumni Association.

Sincerely yours,

Jacob E. Davis II
Chair, National Council
